On April 30, 2014, Michael John Lunn and Fred McEachren were killed by a former employee of the company where they worked.

The shootings at the Nanaimo Mill took place just before 7 a.m. The shooter entered the work site carrying a shotgun and a handgun.

Michael was just getting out of his truck in the company parking lot when the shooter approached him. Michael was the first victim, and was shot with a heavy gauge shotgun. He died only minutes after being shot. Next, the shooter entered a small office and shot and killed a plant supervisor, Fred McEachren. The shooter then wounded two additional employees, one whom was the Vice President of Western Forest Products. Two other co-workers were able to restrain the shooter and ended the shooting spree.

Michael was a devoted husband, father and grandfather. Michael was the plant union Chairperson. He loved his work and the union role of protecting the rights of workers at his mill site and supporting coworkers in need.

The Red Shirt Foundation grew out of this terrible tragedy. As Michael's family worked through their grief they realized that they could turn the pain they were feeling into a purpose.

The Red Shirt Foundation works towards finding and developing tools to assist people affected by workplace violence, raising awareness about mental health issues and supporting people who are dealing with the effects of workplace violence.

The Foundation's name came from Michael's vast collection of red t-shirts; his signature attire. Over time, this foundation has grown and developed a focus, vision, mission, and annual plans. Marlene Lunn and Mike's children are spokespeople for ending violence in the workplace.

Sponsor a hole or an event. Play a round of golf. Make a difference.
